Park Row, New York.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York as Second-Class Mail Matter. One year.....$6.75

VOLUME 48......NO. 16,786.

WALL STREET'S COAXING.

EVERY gambling house adopts methods to bring in trade. The uptown gambling houses, where roulette wheels spin at night and the cards glide softly from the faro box, employ well-dressed runners to frequent the hotels and make the acquaintance of men with money who come to New York to spend it. Some of these gambling houses have attached to their outside staff members of clubs of good social repute, who induce their fellow members to gamble. The percentage of the game, with a little dexterous dealing and an adjustable roulette wheel, pays all the expenses of these outside men besides the cost of running the house and police and political alliances. There is remaining Immense profits to the gambling proprietor. All they need is customers with money.

That is all Wall Street needs.

If a man with money can only be induced to gamble the gamblers will get the money. It is less work and trouble for a Wall Street gambler to take over his customers' money than for a dealer to handle a deck of cards or spin a wheel.

Somehow the public are becoming convinced of the fact that Wall Street is nothing but a big gambling house, and that anybody who goes there to gamble is sure to lose. The Evening World has been trying its best for a long time to impress upon its readers that they had better save time and worry and give their money away than speculate in stocks.

Whatever the reason - whether The Evening World's arguments or the superior attraction of other forms of gambling or increased expenditure in other directions, o a general reaction against gambling folly-Wall Street is not doing a much business this summer as usual.

The brokers are complaining of hard times.

The harder times the Wall Street brokers have the more money will be left in the pockets of the men who earned it.

But Wall Street does not submit acquiescently to dull business. It follows the tactics of the uptown gamblers. It employs touts. It sends around alluring circulars of how to get rich quick. It even sends persuaders to men with a little money to induce them to part with it.

Wall Street's coaxing should fall upon dear ears. Its blandishments should be met with a stony heart and a tightly sealed pocketbook.

If stocks were really worth more than Wal Street brokers are trying to sell them for they would higher price. Only legitimate businesses run a bargain counter. No gambling house has clearance sales of chips, and intrinsically the chips made of genuine ivory are worth more than the linen paper on which Wall Street prints.

If the general public only persists in keeping out of Wall Street the big gamblers may be forced to go into some legitimate business. Instead of finding it so profitable to unload stocks and bonds on the public they may conclude that it is better in the long run to manage a great railroad economically, safely and efficiently. They may find that a legitimate manufacturing business is more remunerative than a speculative trust, that the production of useful commodities pays better dividends than the printing of gilt stock certificates.

That lesson the public must teach them, and the public is making a good beginning by resisting Wall Street's

Letters from the People.

To the Editor of The Evening World: to secure servants will begin. And, protected in matters of this kind? probably, the usual number of people will break up home life and go to Money-Greed and the Crime Wave notels because they can't find servants. To the Editor of The Evening World: Why can't girls have sense enough to realize that domestic service at $30 a peals to mothers and young women month with board and lodging free and stay at home and thus help stifle the occasional clothing thrown in, is a far wave of crime. The Commissioner could better, more prosperous career than do a lot, toward this end if he would factory or store work at 16 or 18 a enforce the laws against owners and

To the Editor of The Evening World:

Where can I find the method or usual way of procuring a marriage !!
To the Editor of The Evening World:

To the Editor of The Evening World:

New York State, and only of non-residents in New Jersey.

Stars Here and in the Tropics. To the Editor of The Evening World: so-called Edison star and your correct for saying she remembers an "L" sta-reply that there is no Edison star. flor at West Eleventh and Greenwich Whenever any particularly bright star streets, I would say i toot distinct appears that query always comes up. remember an "L" station situated there Just now it is doubtless caused by the But it was there only a short time. I unusual size and brilliancy, of Mars in also attended Grove street school, like the southeastern heavens every evening. herself, Miss Brownbush being princi-

To the Editor of The Evening World: Where could I apply for enlistment To the Elliot of The Elening World Information in the Engineer Corps of To settle a dispute: Is Ketten mar-the United States Army? W. C. ried? In a club of twenty we are Dangerous Dogs.

To the Enter of The Evening World:

Why does not the city compel owners of dogs to keep them muzzled during the months of July and August? Last evening my son, a child of eleven years of age, was walking on Broadway and One Hundred and Third street way and One Hundred and Third street with some other children when a dog, to the Editor of The Evening World: hand. The owner then ran away, to In a couple of months the annual rush protect the dog. Cannot the people by Commissioner Bingham is issuing ap week? Let readers talk this over. It's a agents of apartment houses who rent timely subject. Mrs. JOHN S. them to disreputable women because it See World Almanae, Page 252. pays better than renting to decen conse in New Jersey or New York and the marriage laws. &c.?

I. B. I worked for a bose for some time and I did not get any pay and he refuses to No marriage license is required in pay me. Where can I apply for redress?

Remembers, "Lost" Station.

To the Editor of The Evening World: In reply to "S. R. If., of Hacken I've read several queries about the sack," who says people laugh at he the southeastern heavens every evening.
It is, however, less bright than many par at the time. S. R. H. is correct in her statement. S. D. LANE.
Point Pleasant, N. J.

He Is Married.

about equally divided on the subject Part of us say he must be married he could not understand so well the

The Last Laugh. By Maurice Ketten.

not be allowed to go out of Wall Street except at a Love and Bad Temper.

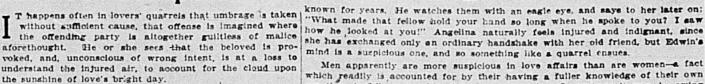

understand the injured air, to account for the cloud upon case it probably is the best plan to "smile and never refer matters right themselves. There are people who are adepts in all, or not at all."

who willingly will wound a trusting, loving heart. Such action presupposes petual high tide of emotion. The lover who expects to find his sweetheart ready crueity of disposition, and is a danger signal to those who are wise enough to to respond to his passionate ecstacles at every hour of the day is drawing heavily construe it aright. On the other hand, touchy people, quick to take offense, who, as the saying goes, walk around with a chip on the shoulder, that it may be Tribune. knocked off and give them occasion to do battle for it, are not comfortable persons to live with. The better one loves them, alas! the harder it is to keen the seace, and the greater the affection the deeper the hurt of which it is suscepti

Many, if not most, of the quarrels between lovers are caused by jealousy, and TN a letter to the Philadelphia Ledger Rear-Admiral George W. Melville, United by the galling cords of jealous love.

By Helen Oldfield.

the sunshine of love's bright day.

It is difficult to applopsize, still more so to atone, when sex than it falls to the lot of women to acquire. Or perhaps it may be owing one has no idea wherefore atonement is expected. In this to a lack of the proverbial intuition of women by which they jump at conclusions, often right ones. Whatever is the cause, the lover will be wise to banish to the trouble," trusting that the cloud may blow over, and the first signs of suspicion from his mind and take for his motto, "Trust me all at walking around an apology, and considering it made, and An exacting love is one which usually proves a hard taskmaster. It demands

It is to be said for the credit of human nature that there are few people is a creature of moods, woman even more so, and it is impossible to have a per-

Washington's Hard Luck.

this often is uncalled for. When it is well grounded it is wise to cry "quits,"

States Navy (retired), calls attention to the decay of the statue of Washing since a jealous nature and one which gives occasion for jealousy are not likely ton at the portals of Independence Hall. Slowly but surely rain and snow States Navy (retired), calls attention to the decay of the statue of Washingto walk together agreed. Better let either man or woman go tree than be bound heat and cold have sapped the life of the marble which, forty years ago, was fashioned by Joseph Bailly into a likeness of Washington. The Ledger quotes a Suspicion is closely kin to tealousy, and is quite as fatal as a peace de- sculpter as saying that one more severe winter will ruin the statue if repairs are Bill Hustle, of Harlem. By H. Methfessel.

Gertrude Barnum Talks To Girls

ABOUT OBSTACLES.

"HE other day, when I went out to a co-operative vacation house, I found all the girls I know betting vigorously on a girl they called "Elilly" for the field day obstacle race. Fudge, ice-cream sodas and chocolate sundaes were being staked upon this girl with reckless prodigality.

"Welf," explained one of my friends, "when she's up against anything all she ever says is, 'Where there's a will there's a way.' We got to calling her 'Wayward Willie,' then it came down to 'Billy,' you see." "And why are you so certain she'll win the obstacle race?" I inquired next

A Determined Girl.

"Why do you call her Billy?" I asked.

Because Billy just dotes on obstacles," said her chum. "She cries for them. She thinks no family should be without them. She likes to pile them up and then walk right over or under or around or through them as though it were easy. No one is in it with her when it comes to obstacles."

they all related an incident which made me feel that their confidence in Billy was not misplaced. It seems that on the previous day several of them, finding it intolerably warm in the house, sought the breezlest hill on the grounds for relief. No sooner had they settled themselves comfortably, however, than the spiders and antebegan to creep and crawl over them in droves. Their only choice seemed that between roasting indoors or being pestered by ants and spiders out of doors, until Billy made the simple suggestion: "Hammocks!"

The Easiest Way Out.

This was welcomed as an inspired utterance. But, alas' after they had pains takingly fetched the hammocks from the porches and laboriously strung them up, and when they were once more endeavoring to compose themselves, the dread sound of buzzing wings announced a new invasion.

"Ugh! Mosquitoes?"

"Ow! Bumblebees!" Simultaneously, ignominiously, those girls deserted that hill, fleeing, with shricks and walls, before the attacking hosts of insects. The only one who preserved any thought of resistance was Billy, though, after a short, sharp battle she retreated for the time being. In half an hour she appeared with a large roll of mosquito netting and a huge umbrella.

"Bring an umbrella and come on back," she said. "We'll fix the bugs and the bumblebees. Where there's a will there's a way."

Waying her umbrella heroically, she led the way, "onward and upward, to recapture the hill from the enemy."

In no time the two friends were reveiling in the cool breezes, entirely free at last from the ills to which their flesh had been heir. High above all creeping things their hammock swung, while the umbrellas and netting furnished insectproof canoples which completely baffled the flying, buzzing, stinging creatures

I did not.

A Will and a Way.

The taste for obstacles is not common. Few of us "cry for them." We seldom hunt them up. And usually, when they block our paths, we just sit down before them and complain loudly, which, of course, has no effect upon the obstacle. As we reflect a little, however, we realize that there must have been, through all the ages, a number of persons who oultivated the taste for over-coming difficulties. Otherwise we should all to-day be still fighting bears and Indians and cannibals, as well as snakes and wasps. And the more we think of it the more we can see that there is nothing better that any of is can do when confronted with an obstacle than to follow Billy's example and get under er over or around or this each it with as much wit and alacrity as possible.

Why should we sit stupidly suffering the fierce heat of life without making an effort to reach the pleasant hills? Why should we submit, mere prey to creeping griefs and crawling horrors, when we might swing up high above them? Why not encompass ourselves and our fellows with a web of hope and faith which will make us oblivious of the small stings and smarts that come buzzing about all human lives?

Why not, like Billy, enter for our obstacle races with courage and joy and win them with intelligence and perseverance

THE STORY of the STREETS OF NEW YORK

By J. Alexander Patten. An Old New Yorker.

On Broadway Near Thirteenth Street.

P IN Broadway, near Thirteenth street, was the house of Judge Roosevelt. The house on the southwest corner of Broadway and Fourteenth street was also a Roosevelt home. The Judge was a very distinguished publis man, held important offices, and with his highborn and stately wite moved in most fashionable society. For many years he wore a claret colored which he appeared at the theatre or opera, always looking a good deal bored, while his wife was a beautiful picture of an animated and dazzling queen since "least said soonest mended," this is good practice undivided and unremitting attention, devotion kept, so to speak, constantly at The Judge was very rich, but so peculiar that I have seen him accept a but boiling point in order to satisfy its requirements. All this is exhausting. Man to eat in a fashionable baker's shop. He could be seen seated in an old willow chair, with a worn cushion, near a window, looking over his private accounts.

In trying the celebrated Mason will case, involving millions of property in this city, he took the paper with the findings of the jury, turned it several times, ent from a pauper into a millionaire

He was very particular that witnesses should give clear answers, but when twyers asked him about cases in which he was engaged he generally answered; 'Oh, I don't remember.' Another lawyer who always attracted attention on Broadway was David

Dudley Field, brother of Cyrus W. Field, and two other distinguished brothers. He was a tall man, brood shouldered, and walked erect with the show of physical and intellectual power. He had the distinction of being one of the odifiers of the State laws, was a great authority and writer on international aw, and received a fortune in fees in a single case that aroused much comment. He lived in a large brownstone house next door to his brother Cyrus. In the sement of the latter's house there assembled one evening Peter Cooper, wh ived just round the corner; Moses Taylor, Marshall O. Roberts and others, all iving in that part of the city, and subscribed the money that started the Atlantic elegraph cable. The scene is shown in a picture hung in the Cooper Union, James T. Brady was another great lawyer who used to come striding alon

James T. Brady was another great in yellow theight, and had the largest broadway. He was thickest and of the medium height, and had the largest head of any man at the bar. One day a lawyer in a hurry in court seized a hast from the table, and when he put it on his head at the door it came down over his eyes. He came back with it in much confusion, while Brady and others have difficulty in suppressing their mirth.

At the trial of Sickles for the murder of Key, in Washington, Brady, a close friend and professional associate of Sickles, made the greatest speech of his life that resulted in an acquittal.

The "Last" Staten Island Mosquito. By Walter A. Sinclair.

("The last Staten Island mosquito has been exterminated."-Item)

HE last Staten Island mosquito has gone to his long, long rest, For with kerosene oil and a great deal of toil the islanders put out the

From Kriescherville, Cliffon and Richmond to old Mr. Kull's famous Kill-In spite of the rumors of anti-land boomers, no "skeet" has presented a bill. The natives are restive in Richmond because they've endured it so long They can't go to sleep on their pillows except to the skeeters' sleep song:

Go to sleep, commuter! Go to sleep, my own! Soon the smoke will shift across from old Bayonne. When the smoke comes drifting out across the Kill That's the only time the skeeter must keep still!

The last Staten Island mosquito's abandoned his life-long toil-No longer he fools over green, slimy pools which are fixed up with Standard Oil. He packed up his trunk and his camping out bunk, his hammock of filmster

And then he was carried, municipal-ferried, to York he was hurried across Where once he drank gore in a manner galore, he now on retiring, cussed, And mournfully said if he soon woke up dead to put it right up to the trust

"Go to sleep, moskeeter!" Standard Oil cans whine: "What if Rockefeller has to stand a fine? "Little stocks to water, drops of kerosene,

"Good-by, little skeeter, with the disposition mean!" Fierce, ch? When the "last one" drains the oil cup to the drega, Don't forget it's jaid about a billion skeeter eggs.

Suspenders as Life Savers.

A YOUNG baker, who was returning with a companion after an ascent of the Plan Alguille, near Chamounts, in the Alps, was caught by the branch of a tree after faling nearly 200 feet and field aloft by his sunpenders, to the strength of which he owes his life. His companion fell 8,000 feet and was picked up with mearly every bone in his bouy broken.